New historical panel at the Pepe

Tairua Heritage Society continues to work hard bringing our history to life for us. Hard on the heels of the recent Heritage Players show, the Society has just erected a new double-sided information panel to join their others on the Pepe Reserve, opposite the children's playground.

A panel has been erected on the Reserve every year since 2019 when the first one about local geology and the famous archeological find, a Polynesian fishing lure, was unveiled. The others deal with features of our area's history such as the establishment of the settlement of Tairua, the early timber industry, kauri gum, gold, our wharves, and local shipwrecks.

One side of the newly installed panel shows that Tairua has grown from its origins in the 1860s beside the wharf, to expand in distinct phases across the Pepe towards Manaia and Ocean Beach Roads, and up Paku. The other side of the panel tells how, in parallel, a community was created by the development of sports clubs, churches, and the growth of social, education, and emergency services. Improved communications also played a big part in making the settlement an easier and more pleasant place to live.

Illustrated with old photographs, these panels not only provide history about Tairua's 160 years of European settlement, but are a community asset drawing tourists to the site.

This side of the panel tells how Tairua has grown from its origins in the 1860s.

The reverse side of the panel tells how a community was created and enhanced.
